VERBS

The predicate of a sentence always contains a word called a verb.

Verbs are words that show action or connect two ideas in a sentence.

Here are some examples of different types of verbs. These are examples of action verbs. They will tell what the subject does, did, or will do.

ate Mario ate three servings of broccoli.

travels The Smith family travels to Oregon every summer.

dance We dance together in the school play.

walked Mr. Long walked all the way to the grocery store.

slept I slept in a tent in the backyard.

There are other kinds of verbs called linking verbs and helping verbs. You will see these kinds of verbs often. These do not show action, but can be a very important part of a sentence.

Here are some common linking verbs. They link together the circled part of the sentence.

is	(Patty) is (my best friend.)
am	(I) am (nervous about the test.)
are	(We) are (third graders.)
was	(Ms. Kim) was (an architect.)
were	(You) were (very funny in the show.)

Here are some common helping verbs. They help give meaning to the verbs that follow.

has	Harry has (sent) me an e-mail.
have	I have (thought) about the problem for a long time.
had	We had (looked) everywhere for the keys.
can	Sandra will (ask) the clerk for help.
will	You can (have) some of my popcorn.
